

Drawing a Fine Distinction.

"John," said Mrs. Upjohn, who was attending, with some misgivings, a party given by the Gaswells, "who is that distinguished looking man over there by those palms?"

"That's Wiggly, the wealthy manufacturer," answered Mr. Upjohn.

"Manufacturer of what?"

"Tobacco."

"Well," she said, reflecting a moment, "I suppose that may be considered a respectable business. Who is that slightly bald man talking to him?"

"That's Haggly. He's another wealthy manufacturer."

"What does he manufacture?"

"Er—cuspidors."

"John," gasped Mrs. Upjohn, "bring me my wraps and order the carriage!"

"Of all the logical creatures on earth," muttered Mr. Upjohn, as he went away to carry out her instructions, "a woman is the limit!"—Chicago Tribune.

Read the Newspapers.

Wise Father—"My son, if you would succeed in life, you must form two good habits. First, you must always attend strictly to your business, and, second, you must subscribe for a newspaper, and read it every day."

Son—"Why should I take a newspaper?"

Wise Father—"Because if you are not known as a newspaper reader, you will be constantly called away from your business to serve on juries."—New York Weekly.
